The lighting project for the competition concerning the urban renewal of Lugano is designed in close connection with the place and its inhabitants. The sun sets and man has no longer the visual domain of the context, so he resorts to artificial light in order to recreate the emotions that during thousands of years he admires in his wake. "When evening comes, a few lights in the silence" in this way Gadda tells the magic of the transition from solar to the human domain. Our work is characterized by three approaches which place the light in connection with the man-made environment: the light in the urban setting, the light in relation to communications/events and the light in relation to architecture. Three themes addressed by the only goal to make the city's nightlife comfortable and sustainable.
